Peach Tree

by cybil Wednesday, Apr 22 2020, 9:14am international / poetry / post an old peach tree remains in the yard planted by who knows who many years past as its gnarled and rough branches betray but when in season its fruiting flowers are youthful and fertile, how it transforms itself magically it is then that a solitary dove alights in its branches almost hidden in the flowers and leaves, if not for its coo'ing it would almost be invisible the throated dove coo's for its mate but its mate is no more, how profoundly sad it makes me feel tho i have lost myself watching the flowers and bees drenched in the seasonal sun until a haunting throated call resurrects my soul very soon ripe peaches will decorate the tree

Food Combining -- know what you're eating

Underground Oz Poetry. http://ozpoetry.lingama.net/news/poem-1000.html