River

by marra Wednesday, Dec 26 2012, 11:48am international / poetry / post sitting by the bank the water snaps a tail whips a gleam catches the sunlight in a flash a fish disappears into the depths perfectly adapted to the medium freshwater fish appear and disappear at will evading traps and lines which they tangle in the rushes and roots of water trees i've sat and watched from this bank countless times, it is never the same though we imagine the river is constant we've given it an English name and mapped it yet the river evades our feeble attempts to fix it in any lexicon it once teamed with aquatic and amphibian

life
singing frogs, flashing fish
and cunning cod
have evaded extinction for thousands of years though today their days are numbered

the river unhappily accepts runoff from rains laden with toxic sprays and fertilisers modern man has no connection to the land/environment he sees it through words, stats litres, dams and forced production for thousands of years it supported the originals, no better stewardship exists than native people inextricably linked to the land we killed them off before we killed the river, what do primitives know of modern farming methods and aquaculture?

very little, but they knew how to harvest its bounty without upsetting the delicate balance that sustained all manner of life and what do we know?

how to exploit, pollute and kill everything we touch we continue to regard the originals as ignorant primitives.

http://jungledrum.hopto.org/news/story-317.html