Hanna on a Skateboard

i need to get out daily to escape my crowded solitude in throngs of city people i find complete anonymity peace

it's not so much an irony as it is plain reality it's like looking for that hidden good in everyone
i've searched every crevice of my being and found no such thing but something seems to attract them i know not what a Swede, Hanna on a skateboard asked if she could walk with me up Oxford, Paddo i said "you may," with a smile

22 for fuck's sake and me almost three times her age i marvel at this interaction my solitude invaded by impulsive youth looking for what i know not but i'll keep looking for that piece of good in everyone

i'm sure to find something some day
