Dormant

the mute mount in the distance appears as something it is not at rest now but ferocious and merciless when active the mount is a volcano in repose do not be deceived by its snow-covered summit it hides explosive fury and rivers of lava - endless fire-streams that reduce everything for miles around to a moonscape things are never what they seem, everything reverts to itself and a volcano is a time-bomb ready to explode and wreak havoc across the land mega-tonnes of power in one volcano how much more in a caldera, a nursery of volcanoes -Rabaul and Yellowstone are overdue, as is the big one along the fault in California humans are so arrogant in times of dormancy; they have forgotten how vulnerable and insignificant they really are
