The Blue Flute

during certain astronomical phases on moonless nights a strange fluorescence can be seen emanating from deep within the forest attention caught by the blueish glow a hypnotic sound becomes audible the sound/music draws all souls to it, such is its strange allure arriving at the grove i see young nubile girls dancing around a central figure playing a flute moving closer to gain a better orientation and perhaps a glimpse of the visage of this forest flautist my body becomes light as a feather maidens continue dancing ecstatically oblivious to everything except the central figure who moves in rhythm to his music naked from the waist up draped in garlands of scented exotic flowers his firm musculature and strong shoulders give the impression he could support the universe maidens wet with sweat thighs moist with vaginal juices betray sexual frenzy; they dance and whirl in ecstasy crying, Hari! Hari! Hari!

everything expands until a swirling singing sea of sixteen thousand maidens whirls around the figure like a vortex with a central Sun

as the music reaches a crescendo the flute magically expands and elongates spurting wild music to the orgiastic screams and moans of the nubile girls, whose dishevelled hair and loosened saris reveal their naked yearning, wet with desire the central figure turns always orienting his back to me unidentifiable i climb a gold and silver tree adorned with the sun and moon to gain a better view and see to my amazement the flautist's reflected face in a lake head cocked sideways, lips shaped around the aperture, blowing, the flautist is me
