Precious

by hector Sunday, Dec 29 2013, 10:10am international / poetry / post we rhapsodise, excruciate

we run the (gauntlet) gamut of emotion
and yet if every one of us died instantly existence would be no worse off, perhaps even better off our craft is pure self-indulgence poetry for whom do we write? to the world, to a person, to nature don't make me laugh we write for ourselves regardless of the lies and pretence -- semantic masturbation, textual narcissism how very precious we are we are poets, not a rare or endangered species -- there's never been a shortage of wankers in any human society or culture we all have something to say but we trip the text fantastic saying it rather than use the integrity of plain speech we convolute, involute and complicate how precious we are?

why state something plainly when u can embellish, elaborate exaggerate and just plain LIE O, but we should never ever use THAT word in that context regardless of how many drooling dunces follow us from reading to reading or how many dedicated novitiates open their legs for the artist the authenticity of a hemorrhaging crimson wound or the stench of a battlefield, the starkness of a sea-cliff and the wind hissing through the long desolate grass puts us all to shame the crispness of truth virgin white as a winter morning frozen with meaning, defying our pretences mocking our attempts to capture the wonder of a single snowflake or dry autumn leaf

Underground Oz Poetry. http://ozpoetry.lingama.net/news/poem-448.html