

What it is to be Human by zed Sunday, Feb 9 2014, 10:47am international / poetry / post these perverse times demand that the forgotten essential nature of humanity is spelled out identifying what it is to be human is simplicity itself

we are an expression of universal creation (one of infinite number) with characteristics not foreign to the whole

we find ourselves, our peace and joy in sharing love; we are transceivers of love, the motivating force of all creation is it so strange that we are at our best when we reflect, generate, give and receive love?

strange perhaps for the perverse but not for children or the pure of heart

we are not born to kill engage in senseless wars of theft and appropriation; we are not born to divide humanity into factions, we are born to love each other and all creation as ONE that is our essential nature and reason for Being watch children of all creeds, races and religions play together as one oblivious to superficial differences - a child has no difficulty recognising humanity is it coincidence that all the great religious teachers espouse good fellowship and love?

if we veer from our essential nature and purpose we suffer, surely the joy of love and the suffering of perversity are good teachers never inflict pain on any creature do not disrupt the harmony of nature live life in peace and joy as ONE, you know it to be true simply because you are human hold fast to love, harmony and good fellowship, reject the evil and divisive perversity that has overtaken the world it is time to turn your back on those that divide, kill and destroy embrace one another in Love and prosper

once again