it's raining in my mind
yet my eyes are dry

white clouds drift across a crisp sky
like dream reveries
an assortment of memories now etched
forever on the akasha,
as each ends another
begins
it's a conspiracy
like evil,
forever doomed
to chase and
assail good,
which it can never obliterate

but for the notion ...
and u should know
the rest

one indeed begets the other

from the highest peak
the view is disturbed
by the viewer

vapours
that animate
the dead
also write this poem

thought cuts thru
the flow (of inspiration)
like a scalpel
sliced clean
to form a wound
or punctuation,
something that disturbs
meaning,

the meaning which
is ultimately meaningless

from this crag i see a carousel in the distance, seated on a wooden pony is Eduard Shevardnadze - he errs in that he imagines it is the white inanimate pony that transports him;
i turn his desperate attention to a light on the horizon behind which he will meet himself

peace returns stealthily
like a prowler
in the night
