

Scheherazade

by rayn Friday, Dec 5 2014, 9:19am

international / poetry / post a severed head screams, its voice demolishing the cultural fortress of female oppression the head belongs to a female Moroccan poet that defied her ideological containment with poetry

she screams like a banshee moderated with delicious imagery from crystal castles and sullen dreams of social incarceration though freedom roars from her heart and soul like a raging river she is victorious, no burka of oppression and containment could veil or hide this voice her anguish and joy is that of all women subjected to mortifying oppression her boiling passion forced its way around the world and into my soul, a kindred poetic soul tho male accidentally exposed to her verse i am enthralled in an instant and am now honoured to praise her prowess

i forget her name but what is the name of a rose that blooms among the dead debris of an antiquated religion she has captured the deadly viper by the head and made it subject to her verse, the sweet taste of freedom moistens

her lips and every word she utters

hail sister, i am privileged to have encountered ur triumphant soul and uncontainable spirit

 Scheherazade

Underground Oz Poetry. <http://ozpoetry.lingama.net/news/poem-546.html>