

The Grass Eaters

by alice via carroll - Inverse Times Saturday, Jul 28 2018, 9:02am international / poetry / post the earth's green provides for our needs and the most prolific vegetation is grass but do not compare humanity with bovines and other grass eaters tho there is no escaping it rice, rye, barley, wheat, maize/corn etc, are all grasses which provide staples for the populations of entire continents discovered as a reliable food-source they were cultivated allowing for stores of food without the need to gather and hunt daily, which led to the formation of communities and free time which led to the developments of writing and culture, moo, chirp and baa'aa, and so modern man has more in common with sheep than lions notice how easy large herds of humans are led by their shepherds follow me this way, but not that way, baa'aa i've often wondered if a chemical exists in grass based foods that facilitate servility, the need to follow rather than cut a solo course like tigers, what is it about human sheep that makes them so susceptible to servitude, the urge to follow?

have u seen how easy it is for slaughterhouses to lead grass eating cattle and sheep to their deaths, the victims not realising they have been led to their deaths until the very end, but then it's too late?

perhaps if we paid more attention to the shepherds it would awaken the herd they are wolves that delight in managing, exploiting and consuming passive,

fear ridden grass eaters

<https://inversetimes.hopto.org/news/story-156.html>

