

Night Flyer

flying by night
seeks a luminary to navigate

all earthly night flyers fly by the moon with dusted wings ever so light fluttering like airborne orgasms which terrestrial creatures envy, they seem to know the ecstasy of our flight tho they prey on us continually, spitefully jealous it seems,
but what do we/i care?
very little, if anything i alight on a wall attracted by electric light, the downfall of my kind but nature, as if aware of future time, provided a strategy irresistible we produce young by the millions impelled to reproduce again and again -- sometimes our flying swarms obliterate sight of the moon from ground you terrestrials have no hope of silencing the humming of our dusted wings that flutter by the moon in unspeakable delight
